

Czech Republic

Two distinct patterns were seen when looking at the information presented: first, there is a larger amount of ruins & archaeological sites located in the northern half (80%) of the Czech Republic in comparison to the southern half (20%). This may be due to the higher population that exists there, but is more likely connected to its geographical location of major conflicts. The other pattern that arose was that over 70% of the major ruins located with the Czech Republic are within ten miles of the disputed border regions.
